CHECKING IN ON SC'S 2019 HEMP HARVEST

STORY AND PHOTOS BY EVA MOORE

Ariel Ezekiel and her husband grew 40 acres of hemp

this year. They harvested it in October, hanging it in a

In mid-October, Ariel Ezekiel's hemp harvest was well underway. A massive warehouse in Aiken County was hung from floor to ceiling with stalks of hemp strung up with the use of a boom lift. Enormous fans would normally have been pulling air into the warehouse, but because it was humid outside that day, the fans were turned off.

"We need to get the moisture below 15 percent," Ezekiel said of the harvested hemp. "Processors prefer below 10 percent."

Moisture is one of many factors that can jeopardize a hemp crop. Ezekiel implemented strict controls to make sure her product was sufficiently dry before it was sealed in a bag and delivered to a processor. But mold caused by excess moisture was a problem for some South Carolina hemp farmers this year, says SCDA hemp program coordinator Vanessa Elsalah. Some who grew in plastic mulch struggled with mold in the soil, and other farmers struggled with mold after harvest.

2019 was the second year of South Carolina's Hemp Farming Program, and the first year that farmers were permitted to grow unlimited acreage. In 2018, the program had 20 farmers permitted to grow 20 acres apiece. In 2019, there were 114 hemp farmers and 211 responsible parties permitted to grow more than 3,700 acres of hemp.

The number of processors has skyrocketed as well, from zero last year to more than 40 permitted processors this year. Four seed companies have started up. A handful of in-state banks are now accepting hemp as a legitimate crop for the purposes of loans. By all measures, the state's hemp industry has taken off.

"We have grown tremendously in the last year," Elsalah says.

David DeWitt, a Clemson Extension agent and agronomist who serves as Clemson's statewide coordinator for hemp, says the second year of hemp farming in South Carolina saw positive progress.

"We still ran into issues — weather, disease, insects — but overall I think knowledge was gained and yields were increased," he says.

The cost to grow hemp in South Carolina this year averaged $10,000 to $12,000 per acre, DeWitt estimates, though some farmers spent more than that — especially those with security concerns.

Both DeWitt and Elsalah say genetics improved in 2019, and continued improvement will be key to South Carolina's hemp industry as seed companies work toward creating the hemp varieties that grow best in South Carolina.

"It's going to take a

"It's going to take a few years of breeding programs for those genetics to become strong," Elsalah says.

DeWitt says he also saw higher cannabidiol levels this year.
Cannabidiol, or CBD, is a natural compound in hemp. While there's hope that South Carolina hemp farmers will find markets for uses like fiber and culinary oils, most farmers in 2019 were growing hemp for CBD processing.

far as crop success and profit.

Ariel and her husband Mark Ezekiel grew 40 acres on their Aiken County farm, and they plan to grow more acreage next year. There's been some trial and error, Ezekiel said. She spent a lot of time testing her crop's THC and CBD levels, selectively harvesting plants, and talking to processors to figure out exactly what they wanted.

"Processors buy hemp biomass, but there are different levels of quality," she said, running her hand through a bag of dried hemp. "This is high quality. No stalk."

SCDA is also making plans for next year, including creating a new permit category for hemp handlers and implementing a seed-to-sale tracking system that will help farmers provide testing results to SCDA and offer transparency for consumers.

CHRISTMAS AT HOME

2019 is quickly drawing to a close. Hard to imagine the calendar will read 2020 in less than a month.

Like all of you, I'm looking forward to spending some time at home with my family this Christmas. It's that time that we also look forward to the New Year — a good time to reflect on the year behind us and make plans for the future.

It's been a year of ups and downs for South Carolina farmers. We had a drought, a hurricane, and a trade war — but we also saw some new opportunities. Last week I attended South Carolina Farm Bureau's annual meeting. I spoke about opportunities we've helped create for South Carolina agriculture, like ACRE, the hemp farming program, and economic development.

I also talked about some of the challenges for agriculture going forward. For example, South Carolina's population has grown nearly 10 percent since 2010, and doubled since 1970, and that fast-growing population is both a burden and an opportunity for South Carolina farmers. More folks to feed but also more neighbors who don't understand the challenges of production agriculture.

The South Carolina
Department of Agriculture is working to nurture entrepreneurs who address agriculture problems in creative ways.

We're also working to recruit and develop new processors so farmers can diversify the crops they plant and animals they raise.

But before the New Year begins, it's time to focus on Christmas and let it be a chance to relax and recharge.

I love seeing my two grandchildren, Clara and Virginia, learning about the magic of the season. I'm already thinking ahead to Christmas when a third grandchild will be a part of our family.

Not only is Christmas a special time to celebrate, give thanks, and fellowship, it's also a great season to enjoy good food. I hope you'll seek out food grown by South Carolina farmers for your holiday table — and check out the South Carolina Specialty Food Association members on pages 4 and 5 of this issue.

At my house, we end up spending a lot of time around the dinner table beyond just eating — sharing stories of Christmases past, appreciating the time we can spend with loved ones during the holidays, celebrating the great moments of the last year, and taking time to remember those less fortunate than us.

From Blanche, me, and the South Carolina Department of Agriculture, have a Merry Christmas and happy holidays!

SCDA SETS OUT TIMELINE FOR 2020 HEMP PERMITTING

BY SC DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

After the US Department of Agriculture released its 161-page interim final rule in October setting out a national regulatory framework for hemp, we understand many hemp farmers and other stakeholders have questions about the next steps for South Carolina's Hemp Farming Program.

In order to comply with state law, The South Carolina Department of Agriculture submitted a "placeholder" state hemp plan to USDA in August 2019 because the interim final rule had not yet been released. Now, we are working to gather comments on the rule, as well as to write a new state plan.

We intend to open applications for the 2020 growing season on February 1, 2020. However, in an abundance of caution, we plan to extend current permits through May 1, 2020. A fuller timeline is available on the SCDA website.

For the 2020 growing season, we will no longer allow permitted farmers to let responsible parties grow hemp under their license: Anyone growing hemp in South Carolina will have to be a permitted hemp farmer. Current responsible parties who intend to grow hemp next year should make plans to apply for their own permit, or to destroy any hemp in their possession in accordance with state law when the permit under which they are licensed expires.

We invite hemp farmers and other stakeholders to share their concerns and questions about the interim final rule with SCDA, or to submit comments to USDA themselves. We have posted a brief summary of the interim rule online at agriculture.sc.gov/hemp. Comments on the rule can be emailed to hempstaff@scda.sc.gov. Please include a name, contact information, and a Hemp Farming License number, if applicable.

SC AGRITOURISM ASSOCIATION HOLDS 2-DAY CONFERENCE & TOUR

Interested in incorporating agritourism into your farm? Looking to expand or diversify your agritourism offerings? The South Carolina Agritourism Association will hold its annual conference Jan. 27-28, 2020, in Rock Hill, with plenty of opportunities for learning.

The conference includes a day of professional development sessions covering a wide array of topics including working with schools, zoning and working with local government, social media and dealing with negative feedback, and hosting events on your property.

It will also include a pub crawl of Rock Hill and other opportunities for networking, and a bus tour with stops at Tatanka Bison Ranch, Black's Peaches, Windy Hill Orchard and Cidery, and Penny Family Farm. The tour offers a chance to view area agritourism operations up-close and get your questions answered — farmer to farmer!

Tickets for the conference and farm tour are $150 for the general public and $100 for association members. Visit scagritourism.org for more information and a registration link. For additional information, contact Agritourism Marketing Specialist Jackie Moore at 803-734-2144 or jmoore@scda.sc.gov.

FARMERS LEARN THE SCIENCE OF SOIL HEALTH AT CLEMSON CONFERENCE

BY DENISE ATTAWAY, CLEMSON UNIVERSITY

CLEMSON - Healthy crops begin with healthy soil, and researchers with the Clemson University's Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education (SARE) program are teaching farmers how they can benefit from keeping their soils fit.

The researchers teamed up with other agricultural professionals and farmers who have implemented soil health principles by using cover crops, no till and livestock integration to hold a conference to teach about soil health and tools to use to promote healthy soil.

"Soil is one of the most precious resources we have," said Geoff Zehnder, Clemson SARE coordinator and co-organizer. "We depend on soil for our livelihoods and we must learn how to keep soil healthy so that it will continue to work for us."

Co-organizers with Zehnder for the Building Soil Health: Principles, Practices and Productivity conference were Kelly Flynn with the Clemson Emerging Crops Program and Buz Kloot with the Arnold School of Public Health at the University of South Carolina.

Many people may take soil for granted and think of it as a renewable resource that will always be around. However, worldwide, topsoil has been lost in the past 150 years and is being lost at rates 10 to 40 times faster than it naturally can be replenished. Currently, 40 percent of soil used for agriculture throughout the world is classified as degraded or seriously degraded.

Gail Fuller is a third-generation farmer from Emporia, Kansas, who spoke about how cover crops can help replenish the soil.

"George Washington and Thomas Jefferson used cover crops to replenish the soil after a harvest," Fuller said. "In the 1800s, cover crops were known as 'green manure' and were widely used to enrich the earth and put nutrients back in the soil. Why did we ever get away from using cover crops?"

Availability of synthetic fertilizers and a lack of understanding of the role of organic matter in soil health are two possible reasons why cover cropping practices have declined in modern agriculture. Also, successful implementation of cover cropping requires some knowledge and experience. But creative management can help overcome some of these issues, Fuller said.

"Consider the main crops being grown and then determine which cover crops can be grown so that they won't interfere with harvest and will still have a head start when going into winter," he said.

Fuller said he has learned planting cover crops is a way to increase profits and nutrient cycling, as well as capture solar energy.

Jason Carter, a Richland County farmer, started cover cropping about eight years ago and is seeing no-till should be used in conjunction with other soil conservation practices.

"Soil must be able to function as a vital living ecosystem including nutrient cycling, as well as water infiltration and availability," Lowder said. "Soil also must be physically stable and able to support plant growth. No-till cropland can do this if diverse cover crops are grown."

Doug Newton, a farmer in Dillon and Marlboro counties, grows corn, soybeans, wheat and peanuts.

> He practices no-till and uses cover crops for mulch.

"We had been using no-till on our crops, but didn't see any real soil

Growing cover crops, along with crop rotations, also is helping control nematodes on health benefits until we started growing cover crops," Newton said. "Growing cover crops has allowed us to cut our input costs, without lowering our yields. If we can cut costs and stay in business and it's good for us, we'll continue to grow cover crops."

Newton's farm. While reducing tillage may help, Kris Nichols, soil microbiologist with a soil health consulting firm, said using a systems approach which begins with

"We need to bank more carbon in the soils," Nichols said. "To do this, we need to keep a diversity of plants, including cover crops, growing in our soils. Diversifying crops is good for the climate and good for farmers' wallets."

optimizing plant photosynthesis and soil organic matter is most beneficial.

In addition, carbon in the form of plant organic matter in the soil is essential food for soil microorganisms that perform many benefits in agriculture including making nutrients in the soil more available to plants.

David Kinder is a Royston, Georgia farmer who attended the conference. Kinder grows corn, soybeans and wheat. For diversity, he also raises chickens. Prior to growing row crops and raising chickens, Kinder was a dairy farmer.

"I've learned it's important to learn about new practices and evolve with the times," Kinder said. "You need to evolve, or get left behind."

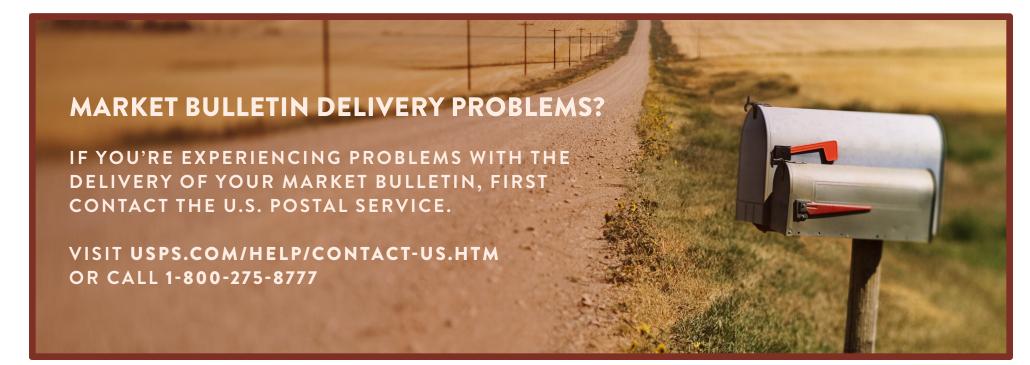

"I had read about it and was interested in using cover crops as a nitrogen source," Carter said. "Since we've started growing cover crops, we've cut back on fertilizer inputs, but are seeing the same yields. We're saving money because our fertilizer costs are lower and yields are remaining the same."

Leon Dueck, a dairy farm owner/operator from Olar, learned about growing cover crops after attending a field day at Carter's farm.

"We, too, have lowered input costs by growing cover crops," Dueck said. "We're also seeing an increase in nutrients in our silage."

Planting the correct cover crops can lead to better soil health by: reducing inputs, discouraging weed growth, promoting drought tolerance, retaining moisture, efficient nutrient cycling, increasing organic matter, increasing diversity and increasing soil carbon. In addition, keeping soil covered can help control erosion, protect soil aggregates, cool soil and provide habitats for soil organisms.

In addition to growing cover crops, utilizing no-till practices also can help alleviate soil disturbances and minimize soil losses. Nathan Lowder of the USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service said

CLEMSON STUDENT STUDIES MAJOR DISEASE IN HOPES OF BRINGING RELIEF TO PEACH INDUSTRY

BY DENISE ATTAWAY, CLEMSON UNIVERSITY
IMAGES COURTESY OF CLEMSON UNIVERSITY PUBLIC SERVICE AND AGRICULTURE

CLEMSON – Bacterial spot has threatened South Carolina peaches for as long as anyone can remember, but a Clemson University student is hoping his research can bring some relief to the peach industry.

Brodie Cox, a master's student in plant and environmental sciences from Aiken, is focusing his studies on bacterial spot caused by Xanthomonas arboricola pv. pruni. (Xap).

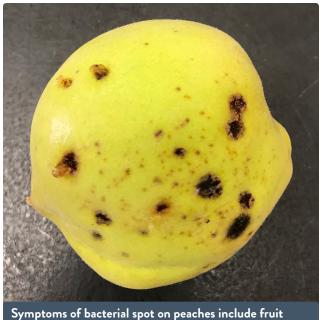

"Bacterial spot is tough to control," Cox said. "Once this disease makes its way to a field, it's there for the life of the orchard.

Bacterial spot is a major disease in peaches. Symptoms on green fruit include watersoaked lesions, while symptoms on maturing fruit vary from light speckles to deep crater lesions. Leaves also are affected and show yellowing starting at the tip end. Severe leaf infections can cause early defoliation resulting in reduced fruit size, sunburn and cracking.

"Bacterial spot is tough to control," Cox said. "Once this disease makes its way to a field, it's there for the life of the orchard."

Cox's major professor, Clemson plant pathologist Guido Schnabel, said the fight against bacterial spot is a constant battle.

"Growers spray for this disease all of the time," Schnabel said. "But we still cannot effectively manage bacterial spot."

Symptoms of bacterial spot on peaches include fruit spots, leaf spots and twig cankers.

The study focuses on determining where the bacteria overwinter and how they adapt to chemical exposure. Cox collected tissue samples from four South Carolina peach farms three times during the growing season – in early spring, late spring and 2 weeks prior to harvest in mid/late summer – to capture a picture of the bacteria's sensitivity to chemicals throughout the growing season. He then applied a petri dish-based assay to test common control compounds such as copper and oxytetracycline. Repeated applications typically are necessary for even minimal disease control.

"We compared common control methods to try and get a better idea of what can be done to better control bacterial spot," Cox said.

Hehe Wang, a Clemson plant bacteriologist, said Xap is difficult to control because most commercial peaches are susceptible and the limited number of disease-tolerant/resistant cultivars also could develop symptoms during high-infection periods.

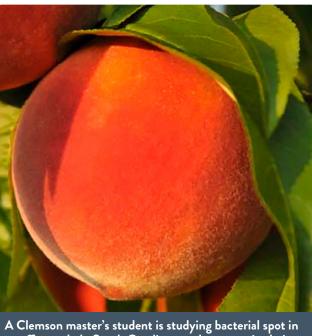

In addition, there are no cultural controls available and chemical control options are limited.

"The current disease management mainly relies on weekly spray of copper and antibiotics, such as oxytetracycline, throughout the growing season," Wang said. "But the disease incidence is still high when weather conditions are conducive. The disease pressure in the past few years has been high and it has raised concern about the development of chemical resistance in the Xap population."

The disease is more apt to occur during warm, wet spring weather. Information from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration North Carolina Institute for Climate Studies shows the average temperature for South Carolina has increased about 0.5 degrees since the early 20th century. Historically unprecedented warming, including extreme heat events, is projected by the end of the 21st century. Figures from the NOAA National Centers for Environmental Information show South Carolina spring temperatures and rainfall amounts have been above average for the past several years.

Peaches are a driving force in the South Carolina economy and if temperatures and precipitation continue to increase during spring months when peaches are growing, the state's agricultural economy could be hit hard. According to the United States Department of Agriculture, South Carolina is second to California in peach production. In 2018, South Carolina growers produced 65,800 tons of peaches. California produced 479,000 tons of peaches and Georgia came in third with 26,000 tons of peaches produced.

A Clemson master's student is studying bacterial spot in an effort to help South Carolina peach growers in their fight against this devastating disease.

Cox earned his bachelor's degree in plant and environmental sciences from Clemson in 2018. He plans to graduate with his master's degree in 2020. While he may not have a definite fix for bacterial spot of peach by then, Cox said he hopes to gain a better understanding of the disease so that he can help South Carolina growers produce better peaches.

"I grew up close to major peach growers and I've always had a heart for peaches," Cox said. "Studying at Clemson has helped me understand Cooperative Extension research and how vital that research is for the agricultural industry. While in undergraduate school, we were challenged to think critically and learn how to apply our knowledge to the world around us. My work experience in the lab and in the field while at Clemson has helped me understand how to move discoveries from the lab to the field in order to make an impact on the industry. Working alongside Dr. Schnabel with local growers has helped me communicate and work with growers in the industry. I want to continue to do what I can to help the South Carolina agricultural industry."

FUNDS AVAILABLE TO SUPPORT ORGANIC CERTIFICATION

The deadline to apply for National Organic Certification Cost Share Program funds from the South Carolina Department of Agriculture has been extended through Dec. 31, 2019.

The purpose of this program is to defray the costs of receiving and maintaining organic certification. SCDA is authorized to provide reimbursements to certified organic operators for up to 75% of the operation's total allowable certification costs, up to a maximum of $750 per certification scope: crops, livestock, wild crops, and handling (i.e., processing).

South Carolina agribusinesses with organic certification costs that were incurred between Oct. 1, 2018, and Sept. 30, 2019, and that have not yet been submitted for reimbursement to either SCDA or USDA, may be eligible. To apply, visit agriculture.sc.gov/grants.
